

Our History

began over 50 years ago...

It was in 1959 that the Mabe brothers created a legacy of country music and comedy that would go on to be the foundation of the "live music show capital of the world". By adopting the name of an old Ozarks vigilante group, it was on the downtown Branson lakefront that the "Baldknobbers" paved their way into America's musical history. Over the past five decades, the Baldknobbers have evolved with the changing times, but they have always remained true to their rich traditions, their family roots and their ever-present faith.

On January 27, 2011 the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History held a donation ceremony and received a number of original Baldknobbers artifacts from brothers Jim, Lyle and Bill Mabe including costumes and instruments for the permanent collection of the Arts and Culture Division of the museum in Washington D.C.

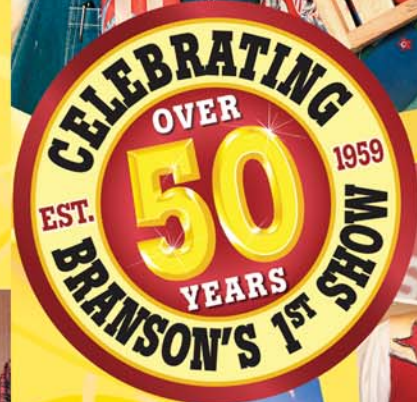

"As the Baldknobbers' second generation, Brent and I always knew that our dads and uncles had done something special by starting the Branson music industry. I believe that our donation to the Smithsonian tells the interesting story of the Ozarks' music genre, and it will also expand the country music collection in the National Museum of American History. Allowing others a glimpse into both the Baldknobbers and the Ozarks' music past is extremely important to our family," said Tim Mabe, producer and comedian.
